

Sinclair Broadcasting's decision to effectively force their stations to air an anti-Kerry documentary days before the election is a clear example of the dangers of media consolidation and bias.

Sinclair uses the public airwaves free of charge, and is obligated by law to serve the public interest. But when large companies control the airwaves, we get less of what is for the betterment of the "common good" of all. Rather than a decision by a far removed "News Central", it's more important that we see real people from our own communities and more substantive news about issues that matter.

Sinclair's actions show why we need to strengthen media ownership rules, not weaken them. They show why the license renewal process needs to involve more than a returned postcard. Thank you.
